Will U.S. military be outsourced?

Editor:

The recent articles in the West Valley View about the recurring problems that face the preservation of Luke Air Force Base, and the pessimistic thoughts that some people convey in their letters to the editor, create much concern.

Builders will build anywhere that people will buy. The people who buy these homes must be aware that Luke is in their back yard. A plane crashes and the television media has to pan the landscape, showing all of the homes adjacent to the crash site. People seem to buy their home, then create an uproar about how the planes should leave. The common legal term is referred to as "buyer beware." Go after your builder instead of complaining about Luke.

To greedy builders, no ground is valued or sacred. All open land is fair game and property throughout the U.S. will become up for grabs if citizens don't put the brakes on this practice.

People throughout the USA have complained about companies outsourcing jobs to foreign countries. I suggest you stop being selfish and passive and fight for what is ours. If we don't, our military training facilities will be outsourced to other countries.
